

I am adamantly opposed to the use of cellular telephones aboard commercial aircraft. I believe that there would be no way to control the noise level of people talking on phones, especially since noise levels on aircraft are already fairly high. I am a frequent flyer on American Airlines. A better solution would be e-mail access. It would give people a silent communications option and respect the privacy of other passengers. As a private pilot however I feel that we should be allowed to use cellphones in GA aircraft. It can be an important safety option.

Thank you,
Timothy Statler